The valor of the noble warriors who fought at Avarayr in 451 A.D. defending their Lord and their freedom to follow Him is well known. And yet, the priest Yeghishe, chronicler of the Vartanian resistance, wrote eloquently of the women who "donned the same breastplate of faith in Christ's command and with one belt of truth girded their waists…they were armed and helmeted, girt with a sword and shield in hand, not only valiant men but virile women." And after the battle, the widows of the fallen and the wives of those taken prisoner prevailed against all odds, in the face of extreme suffering and deprivation.
